

Oxford Institute

2015

This summer, students from the Ph.D. in Leadership Studies program spent a week in England, staying at the University of Oxford and studying the future of leadership from a global perspective.

Dr. Adam Wright, dean of the Gary Cook School of Leadership, organized the tour and taught alongside Dr. Jim Denison, distinguished DBU adjunct professor and founder and CEO of the Denison Forum on Truth and Culture, and Dr. Blake Killingsworth, DBU vice president for communications.

"The Oxford Institute is always a special time of reflection and challenge, both for our students and for us as faculty," shared Dr. Wright. "We have the privilege of walking along the same roads and sitting in the same seats as have many leaders who have gone before us and impacted society for the better. Because of this experience, we continually ask ourselves how we will follow their example and transform our society all for the glory of God."